Chapter 1 by Dave W.

There's a joke my dad used to tell me. There were two squids in the ocean, hanging out, talking. These two squids were young squids, unaware of the ways of the world, dumb, basically.

An older squid walks up to the two younger squids, or more accurately: swims up. The older squid says hello to the two younger squids, who say hello back.

Then the older squid says "How's the water?"

and the younger squids say "Water?"

sorry, it's more of a moral to a story than a joke, but I tell it to myself all the time.

Anyways, the point is take in the world around you. Laying in bed and listening to bleating sheep, a typically hellish everyday scenario, becomes so much more bearable once you understand that you're in 'water' you can do whatever. I mean for gods sake! I started with nothing but my fist and now look at me: On top of the world!! (living in a giant castle)

I don't think anything can go wrong
